When Men in Black Attack: the Strange Case of Albert K. Bender
Gray Barker 2015-01-01

In the year 1984, many Americans began to fear that the “surveillance state” predicted by George Orwell might be coming to pass. As a result, legendary writer and ufologist Gray Barker decided to revisit—and hopefully encapsulate—the strange case of Albert K. Bender, who was famously “hushed up” by three Men in Black in 1953—despite heading up the largest and most successful civilian UFO organization in the world.

Barker had discovered that the three MIB were actually the agents of a race of “bisexual” space people from the planet “Kazik,” who were harvesting Earth’s seawater from an underground base near the South Pole. These alien humanoids had gained control of Bender and spirited him off to Kazik, where he was forced to submit to three sexy, shape-shifting space “women.” Drawing from articles in Saucer News and his three previous books on Bender and the Men in Black (“They Knew Too Much About Flying Saucers,” “Bender Mystery Confirmed,” and “Men in Black: The Secret Terror Among Us”), Barker weaves a fantastic, unique, and memorable tale—one that has influenced several generations of science fiction and UFO enthusiasts, and inspired hot-set in popular television shows such as “The X-Files,” “Futurama,” and “Futurama.”

This special 2015 edition of “When Men in Black Attack: The Strange Case of Albert K. Bender” features an introduction from Jim Moseley, correspondence from dozens of readers, previously unpublished transcripts of rare sightings (such as Bender’s own public lecture), and fascinating contributions from a variety of science-fiction authors, including Edward S. Bing, Don Quay, and art-in-flight: “These are no more than a few minutes of Barker’s story that will enthrall you.” – John A. Keel “Without Gray, there would be no Men in Black mythos...” – Nick Redfern “A psychological thriller from inner and outer space...” – Dr. Ogden Pearl
